Training

Fire service is a public safety organization that provides highly specialized and diverse services.

The public relies on the Fire & Rescue department both when life and property are threatened by emergencies, as well as to assist with issues of a smaller magnitude.

To ensure that all firefighters are prepared to deliver the best level of services required, training standards developed by the NFPA (National Fire Protection Association) are employed to provide each firefighter with needed skills, knowledge and ability necessary to deliver the required emergency services.

Trained Fire & Rescue staff instruct new recruits and firefighters both in-house and through provincially and nationally approved courses to meet National Fire Protection Association Standards. Following the initial 1-year probationary period, new recruits will be tested and upon completion, be promoted to firefighter.
